

He owned it; he had a manager there by the name of George Oxley.

Q Where was the market located?

A It was --I will show you on this paper I have made.

It was on that corner of Grand Central and Vance Avenue, right on this corner, you see, on the west side of Grand Central Avenue. Here was Garibaldi's here. Now, they had a telephone, Garibaldi had a telephone and there was a telephone in the post office.

Q Where is that?

A The telephoned in the post office was up this street, up Reese Avenue up this way, you see. I will put that arrow there to show it was up that way, up Reese Avenue, post office and station.

Q Were any of these telephones in booths or were they open telephones?

A Garibaldi's and the White Oak were both open telephones.

Q Were there any additional booth telephones?

A I think that the post office had a booth at that time; I am almost sure they did.

Q But there was no additional telephone in either Garibaldi's or Greger's, no additional telephone?

A I think the railroad station had a telephone, but we never used that. Garibaldi's and the White Oak, they were
